

FAIR WOMAN AS SHE IS IN APRIL.

HOOPS AND TENNIS.

What Fun There'll Be This Year with Racket and Crinoline.

New Sensation - The Summer Hat and Various Variations Upon the Summer Gown.

What fun there'll be this summer if. as now appears inevitable, crinoline invades the tennis field. The summer irl has been longing for a novelty for some seasons, and now she has got it with a vengeance, hasn't she? I saw some spring tennis frocks made

York modiste for Levi P. Morton's daughters and their ousins. They were pretty frocks and they were stiffened. What think you f that, good people, as an indication? One of these net and racket notions light tan-colored cloth, shot with

Have you seen that summer tion? It's one of the prettiest the new things going. But to return to our mattons. Two little crimson ruffles with two little cream-colored ones between trimmed the skirt of the frock I started to tell you about, and a cod stout strip of horsehair set out ne draperies appreciably. The blouse think of a blouse and hoop skirts— as of crimson silk with a cream-col-ared collar with fan embroideries.

A flat hat lay on a table beside this my mistresses. Tan-colored straw was its foundation, and it was tied up with apple biossoms knotted with crimsor ter, though you won't, very likely, agree with me. The one that struck my fancy was of blue cloth-about a military blue. It had three narrow black satin folds about the bottomdon't exclaim now, for tennis dresse don't settle down to summer neglige before the middle of June-and it had before the madite of sune—and the broad black satin wings—if you're technical in speech I suppose you call them bretelles—over the shoulders and down to the waist, and farther in front behind and clean down to the ground behind. That's an odd sort of frock for tennis possibly, but an uncommonly pretty one. The sleeves were big and loose one. The sleeves were big and loose from the shoulders away down to the hands, little black turn over cuffs fast. Spring fashion? White gloves at eleven to the fingers or again sliding up and leaving the better part of the arm bare.

This again is an odd arrangement for tennis, but then the dress is meant for a girl with uncommonly small and pretty hands. Do you know-this again is departing from the subject, but you must pardon a vagrant mind's up hill and down dale wanderings-it surprises me that long gauntlets have not taken their departure sooner from our fashions in the matter of sleeves.

The gauntlet is a good English style because English hands are large and please their mistresses, so long as they are white and fine of texture, by remaining so; but gauntlet cuffs are not good American style, because American hands are small and the American ideal is to continue them so. gauntlets conduce to an effect of big-ness, and loose sleeves to an effect of littleness, hence the gauntlet must go;

quod erat demonstrandum.

But, theories aside, what is summer going to look like with hoop skirts on the tennis field? Will good play be possible? Yet that, as we all know, doesn't matter, when you come to the heart of things, a particle.

Will the summer girl wear hoops when she goes boating? She can't get into a canoe with them—that much is certain. And mountain climbing! What jolly larks the chipmunks and the woodchucks up in the Catskills will have this summer with crinoline processions wielding ribbon-tied Alpen-stocks in front of them.

What jolly larks we're all having right along, for that matter. For dress is mighty interesting just now. I sat in a window nook overlooking the avenue and watched the girls. They were worth watching. The first who went by was in black satin—and so was the third, and the fifth, and, indeed, every other one. But the first had heliotrope ribbons. They were tied about her waist and then in rows up under her arms, and they finished with gay little bows. Girls have worn ribbons all winter, of course, and I have told you about them, but somehow it lends fresh joy to life to see the gay colors uncloaked and uncaped, flaunting in the light of day and on the

There was a girl behind the first girl, who wore a brown and yellow checked tweed, fleeked with red and gray. The skirt was so full you were very con-scious of the hoops underneath it, and it had three flat rows of brown silk at the bottom, edged with brown velvet piping. The bodice fastened quaintly down one side, and it had a deep turn down frill of golden brown silk about the shoulders which rose and fell in the April breeze like wings.

A wonderfully pretty hat went with this gown, a little flat brown straw hat, running over with buttereups. Do you love butter? I don't really care whether you do or not, but it would be hard to forgive you if you didn't love the little yellow meadow flower with which the youngsters make their tests of one's dietetic affections.

ening them at the wrists, but letting in the morning and with tailor gowns. the great puffs tumble forward quite

There were white veils, but they don't count, not being new. One gloved and veiled girl wore a gown that was almost white also, so light and glittering was its silvery gray. She twinkled and shone like Diana herself before Diana came down from her tower and went to unappreciative Chicago. But it was her flowers I meant to tell you about, for she wore quantities of them; tulips and jonquils, massed in crim-sons and yellows, as it is the fashion of the day to wear all things.

Do you care for hats, or have you heard enough of them? You must see enough if you go out upon the streets at all these bright days. I saw some thing uncommonly piquant which was to the eyes a wide bow of golden brown silk, flaring on either side of the head, with two upstanding bunches of white hyacinths in the middle.

Another concoction a great deal on the same order would be called a bonnet, probably. It was alleged to have a straw crown, though nobody could see it exactly. Somewhere, no doubt, the straw was hidden away, but all that appeared to the casual vision was a pointed wing of pinky white velvet, standing out over either ear with a big cluster of pinky roses binding the wings together on top of the head and crowning the pretty toilet of the uncommonly pretty girl.

There are black hats in plenty, for this is at once a spring of colors, and of black, too. What but black chip could go with the flounces of black satins that fill the promenades? Black chip, with wreaths of green bows standing saucily all about the crown. A curling black feather is knotted into the wreath in front, and another and longer behind. I like spring fixings, for, if there's nothing particularly new about them it's easier at least for them to put on a plausible air of newness than for the gear of any other season.
